NJCH is an independent nonprofit that strengthens our society and increases understanding of ourselves and those around us, through partnership with other organizations, by providing high-quality public humanities programming that explores history, culture, values, and beliefs.

"Our Reading Stories, Building Communities project has introduced culturally diverse and powerfully transformative short stories to dozens of vulnerable adults and young adults. Many of these individuals were never read to as children, many aren't reading on their own, many struggle to procure vital support networks, and many have never had the privilege of studying the humanities. Program evaluations show that 86% of participants want to read more after our program, and 92% agreed that the literature presented helped them better understand themselves, others, and the world."

"Public humanities provide the information and venue for broad engagement in civil discourse about difficult or sensitive issues."
